

A Test For Little Children (about 3 to 8 years old)

A wise King who loved His subjects had to go away for a while, but taught His subjects exactly what to do in His absence, so they would be provided for and protected from their enemies.

Then He went away, and in His absence, some of His subjects did exactly what He commanded, knowing it was for their own good that He taught them these things.

But the rest said "We know He's the King, and we know what He said," but they did not do what their King commanded them.

Which group of subjects loved the King - the first or second ?

Which group didn't care about the King - the first or second ?

Whom then will He keep in His Kingdom when He returns - those who believed Him and did what He taught, or those who did not believe Him and did not do what He taught ?

“If you love Me, keep
My Commandments.”

- Jesus, in John 14:15
